In DAP, educators create and foster a community of learners.

The role of the community is to provide a physical, emotional, and cognitive environment conducive to development and learning for each child.

For non-taking and reference only.
Not for distribution.

- A. Each member of the community is valued by the others and recognized for the strengths they bring.
- B. Relationships are nurtured with each child. Educators facilitate the development of positive relationships among children.

For non-taking and reference only.
Not for distribution.

- C. Each member of the community respects and is accountable to the others to behave in a way that is conducive to the learning and well-being of all.
- D. The physical environment promotes the health and safety of the learning community members. It specifically supports young children's physiological needs for play, activity, sensory stimulation, fresh air, rest, and nourishment.

E. Every effort is made to help each and every member of the community feel psychologically safe and able to focus on being and learning. The overall social-emotional climate is welcoming and positive.

Each member of the community is valued and recognized for the strengths they bring.

For note-taking and reference only.
Not for distribution.

A Process of “Making Meaning”

- Young children are:
 - Capable of highly complex thinking
 - Observe, experience, and interact with the world through play and relationships
 - Bring unique cultural “funds of knowledge” to their early childhood environment

Relationships are nurtured with each child. Educators facilitate the development of positive relationships among children.

Case Study: Visit to a Mixed-Age Preschool Class (p. 17)

Three-year-old Ella is one of the youngest children in Mr. Franklin's class of 3-through 5-year-olds. She loves to build with blocks, but almost everyday, some of the older boys race to the block area and leave little space for anyone else. When Ella tries to enter, they tell her she can't because she's a baby and a girl. One day, she throws blocks in frustration, hurting several children. While Mr. Franklin has had many conversations with the group about all forms of bias, including gender bias, he knows he must do more...

The environment supports young children's physiological needs for play, activity, sensory stimulation, fresh air, rest, and nourishment.

Play promotes joyful learning that fosters self-regulation, language, cognitive, and social competencies as well as content knowledge across disciplines. (p. 33)

Affirmative and Respectful Environments

- Children's sense of belonging, agency, and ownership over their learning can be encouraged (or discouraged) based on how teachers approach interactions.
- Children must see themselves reflected in the environment (their ideas, identities, images, and cultures).

Joyful, Playful Learning

- Play is how children explore, learn about, and make sense of the world.
- Play and playful learning support the development of self-regulation, executive functioning, collaboration, and thinking skills.

For note-taking and reference only.
Not for distribution.

Every effort is made to help each and every member of the community feel safe and able to focus on being and learning.

"Play is the highest form of research."

~ Albert Einstein

"Play can have moments of frustration, uncertainty, doubt, questioning and confusion."

~ Nature Created Play

"Play is an essential way children explore, learn about and make sense of the world."

~NAEYC, DAP 2022

Happiness and Joy... how will you create spaces for children and educators to THRIVE?

Questions/Reflections

In the chat box, please share...

What new thoughts were sparked as you reflected on our last six months together?

Consider how your image of children has changed (what they deserve, what you value about early childhood education).
